- Location: Route 311, Patterson, Putnam County, New York
- Significance: This structure is a contributing element in the Hayt Farmstead complex.
- Description: This building is a long (over 50 feet) gable-roofed nailed post-and-beam frame structure clad in drop siding (on the north side) and rough wood shingling. It is set on a rubble stone foundation and has a concrete floor. The interior is a single long room, with 6/6 double-hung sash windows regularly spaced along the south wall.
- History: The construction date and original use of this structure are unknown. The extensive glazing of the south wall suggests a possible prior use as a poultry house.
- Sources: See Narrative Overview.
- Architectural Historian: M.H. Bowers, Louis Berger & Associates, Inc., February 1989.
